THE RIGHT TO WORK IN ROMANIAN COMMUNISM

Abstract

Work was declared the basic factor of economic life in the communist regime and was, at the same time, an obligation of every citizen. The right to work not offered the choice between working and not working, but the obligation to work – in other words, a mandatory right to work. In Romanian communism, forced labor was imposed in three ways: by laws providing compulsory recruitment and work distribution, compulsory non-professional labor and correctional work. Forced labor practically engaged the entire population from country's hawks to pupils, students and employees of all categories.
