CONCEPTUL ANTIC DE STASIS

Dana Dinu

THE ANCIENT CONCEPT OF STASIS

Abstract

In this article we intend to present the political concept of stasis which departed from a word that followed a semantic evolution divergent from the initial meaning and is applicable in different fields. The term stasis shows a fairly rich polysemy in Greek. Starting from the concrete meaning indicated by the root sta-, representing “positioning” or “stability” or “fixation” and the figuratively “political situation”, this word paradoxically entered the political idiom as “uprising”, “seditious action”, “revolution”, “change”, in other words as “dissension within the civic ensemble”. That’s why it has a strong negative connotation in all authors who treat of this kind of situations. In particular Aristotle in Politica, V largely discusses, exemplifies and sums up in his rigorous manner, the origins, causes and prevention methods for conflict situations within the Greek cities. Thus the word stasis became a political concept. On the other hand stasis also became a concept in the rhetorical theory, applied by the post-Aristotelians, by Cicero in De inventione and various other rhetorical works. The theory of the stasis finds applicability as an instrument of the modern rhetorical analysis, in the conduct of the argument or in the teaching of the rhetorical art.

Abstract

Mihnea III became the prince of Wallachia in the winter of the year 1658 and, in order to cover his debts and to accomplish his anti-Ottoman plans, he came into conflict with the local political elite. He accused several important boyars for treason (hiclenie), killed them and took their estates; among these boyars, an important person was Pârveu Vlădescu, the treasurer of Wallachia, who was killed and lost all his estates for the benefit of Mihnea III. Thus, the Wallachian ruler eliminated his opponents and improved his financial situation, which was very difficult at the beginning of his reign.

Abstract

For contemporary as for historians, Tudor Vladimirescu proved a historic personality hardly covered in patterns, but also had to explain a particular course of Romanian history, to open a „threshold age” and structural changes in Romanian society. Political thought in the Romanian Principalities in the Revolution of 1821 was driven by practical goals, think in terms of power, in a society assume that legitimate hierarchical organization and was distinguished by its own privileges. Moreover, in 1821, power was pivot element around which the facts have become an end, one way, at least to a point, one in which, once lost power, former combatants began to exculpate, to justify and claim a certain political order of the court that they were superior (Russia, Turkey, Austria).

AND POWER SEPARATION IN STATE DURING 1821-1831

Abstract

The picture of restructuring state organization in the West, focusing mainly on the separation of powers, clears a general understanding in the area of Europe, which for some nations was the sluice superstructure medieval imperial. The latter not only made desperate efforts to counter any changes, but maintained the national spaces oppressed by state leadership, became lever rule of domination. In this situation, in the Romanian Principalities (Walachia and Moldavia), “both Dacian people” – according to the expression of a Romanian from Săcele –, hope and “awakeness” in European ideas were built gradually, simultaneous and in common as their projects were expresses towards great powers, some ultra-conservatories and moderate citing socio-political imoilism or at the most aristocratic republic, others liberals full of conceptions and ideals.

After 1821, in the Principalities, the democratic current widened while local political groups have promoted “the application of egalitarian principles to the tip of social pyramid, to transform the leadership of the state from Eastern despot to absolutist light. Under the influence of French Revolution principles from 1789, the so-called “national party” radicalized the modernization concepts, giving them motivation – and implicitly – legitimacy by invoking social-political states from West Europe.

Romanians would to obtain the understanding of the Emperor of Austria. The emperor had the intention to get time, influencing both revolutionary movements until the arrival of the Russian troops. Lajos Kossuth, Nicolae Bălcescu and Cezar Bolliac understood in July 1849 that the cooperation is the only option to choose. Abstract

Napoleon and his France played the role of an ideal model in modernizing the Romanian state founded in 1859. France and her emperor have even provided the moral and material support in shaping some of the new institutions of the Romanian Principalities, institutions initiated by prince A.I. Cuza.

One of Cuza's constant concerns was the creation of a modern and strong army, so that a very interesting and meaningful part of the French-Romanian relations in the given period had to do with the military co-operation. In this respect, the Lamy military French mission (1860-1869), named after the two brothers in charge of this mission, Eugène and Paul Lamy, was to play a very important and significant part in this context.

“JEWISH QUESTION” IN ROMANIA (1866-1880)

Abstract

The following article deals with the situation of Jews and the “Jewish Question” in Romania between 1866-1880. The first Constitution of Romania was adopted in 1866 and the article 7 provided that non-Christians could not become citizens, which chiefly affected Jews. In 1878, at the Treaty of Berlin, Romania tried to obtain its independence. The western Powers tried to force Romania to recognize article 44 from the Treaty, which stipulated that the non-Christians in Romania (including both Jews and Muslims in the newly acquired region of Northern Dobruja) should receive full citizenship. The Romanian government agreed (1879) to abrogate Article 7 of its constitution. In 1879, under Western pressure, article 7 was ostensibly diluted but in fact, it remained nearly impossible for Jews to gain citizenship. This was reformulated to make procedures very difficult: “the naturalization of aliens not under foreign protection should in every individual case be decided by Parliament”.

RELAȚIILE ROMÂNNO-BULGARE ÎN PERIOADA 1878-1886

THE ROMANIAN-BULGARIAN RELATIONS
DURING 1878-1886

Abstract

In 1878, as a consequence of the war between the Russian-Romanian coalition and the Ottoman Empire between 1877-1878, Romania gained its most-wanted independence, and the Bulgarian State reappeared on the South of the Danube, after years of Turkey occupation, still dependent on the High Porte.

The relations between our country and Russia quickly deteriorated because of the fact that Russia occupied the South of Bessarabia. On the other hand, a state of tension inducted by the supporting of the authorities in Sofia from the Czarist Empire side appeared. This situation changed along with Prince Alexander of Battenberg coronation on the Bulgarian throne, who had tact and willingness for maintaining cordial relations with King Carol I of Romania.

Between the years 1878 and 1886 Carol I helped Bulgaria to come out from the Russian guard ship on a diplomatic manner and offering instructors for the Bulgarian Army. Romania approached welcoming neutrality over the Principality of Bulgaria in the Serbo-Bulgarian conflict at the end of 1885. All those resulted in realization of a confederative plan which failed because of Alexander of Battenberg's removal from the throne in 1886.

Abstract

The author publishes two unique documents issued in 1891 and 1895 by the Hungarian Danube Navigation Company. There are first presented a few archeological items discovered accidentally in the area of the Iron Gates and further on the excavations undertaken in 1894 by the above mentioned Company in the area of the ruins of Trajan's Bridge from Drobeta. The investigations and the document issued on this occasion emphasised the physical state of the pillars and brought forward certain opinions regarding its construction, the reasons behind the construction, its demolition, as well as its economical, military and strategic significance. Due to its contents, the document may be granted a special place in the bibliography of the bridge from Drobeta (nowadays Turnu Severin – Romania), built by Apollodorus of Damascus in 103-105 A.D. with a view to conquer Dacia.

Abstract

On the 6th of March 1945 king Michael I had to change general Radescu and appoint Petru Groza for prime minister, at the hasty request of the Russians. This change surprised by its unjustifiably brutal manner, which cannot be explained to this day, for the Russians had total control over Romania, anyway. How can this rush of the Russian leaders be explained? Our study discusses, as possible answers, two of the foreign conditions – real or not – that the soviets used for instituting the first Romanian government controlled by the communists.

Abstract

After King Michael is threatened by Soviet and Romanian communists to appoint a pro-Soviet Government led by Petru Groza in 6 March 1945, the General Rădescu, the previous Prime-Minister, asked to be granted sanctuary in the British Military Mission and British Legation in Bucharest on the grounds he would be arrested by the new Government, being accused of fascism and criminal activities. British Government granted the sanctuary and allowed British representatives in Bucharest to use fire in defending General Rădescu but it wasn't made any attempt to arrest the General. Romanian Government offered guarantees that General Rădescu's life wouldn't be in danger if he left British Legation. Finally, the General left Legation and lived in Bucharest under surveillance for one year when he managed to leave for Cyprus in a plane without Romanian Government's permission.

NICCOLO MACHIAVELLI – CREATOR AL TEORIEI POLITICE

Rezumat

Niccolo Machiavelli este primul teoretician al gândirii politice moderne. Experiența sa politică și diplomatică, în guvernul Florenței renașcentiste și ca reprezentant al acestuia pe lângă Curia Papală, regale Franței i-a permis să creeze o operă fundamentală pentru viitorul teoriei politice, prin care spera să ofere punctul de plecare pentru unirea Italiei, sfâșiată de lupte fratricide și rănită de armatele de mercenari. Rezultatul a fost lucrarea Principele, din care se desprinde ideea unirii prin orice mijloace a Italiei, pornind de la începuturile istorice ale Romei Antice.

Abstract

Niccolò Machiavelli is the first theoretician of modern political thought. Political and diplomatic experience in government as representative of Florentine Renaissance and its addition to the papal curia, king of France allowed him to create a fundamental work for the future of political theory, which hopes to provide a starting point for the unification of Italy, torn by fratricidal struggles and hurt the mercenary armies. The result was the work of Prince, which separates the idea of Italian unification by any means, starting from the early history of ancient Rome.

Abstract

The territorial-administrative organization is one of the most important forms of organization of a space. As a form of political-social regionalization, the territorial-administrative organization is a consequence and, in the same time, a premise of social and economical development. The change of the administrative configuration of the territory is determined by the political, economical, social reason and, much less, by the physical-geographical factors. The territory, subject of this study, is located in south western Romania and is full overlap to the Caraș Severin county and, partially, to the Mehedinți county. In the article, there are analyzed the mutations which occurred in the administrative structure of this area from Daco-Romanian antiquity to the present time. There are presented, evolutionary, the types of territorial-administrative units and the relevant legislation.
